Mideast TV network gaining support in Canada

MEDIA They are professional journalists. They give voice to terrorists. They are vital to democracy. They suppress it. They are Al Jazeera English and they are hoping to come to a TV near you.

The Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission received public comments that varied from strongly in favour to outrageously against an application to allow the Qatar-based broadcaster to air in the country.

Tony Burman, a former CBC news executive who became managing director of Al Jazeera English two years ago, said he is buoyed by the fact there have been far more positive comments than negative.

"Contrary to what people would have predicted, the overwhelming sentiment was in favour of Al Jazeera English being in Canada," said Burman. He said out of 2,652 public comments submitted to the CRTC, there were only 39 against.

Every year, Megan Wilson and her friends arrive prepared to fight the Canada Day crowds.

"Over the years, I learned to not wear flip-flops," said the Toronto resident, who is originally from Ottawa. "Even if it's super hot, there are just too many people pushing and squeezing and you have to protect your feet."

Also, bring your own water, because it can be difficult to find water when you need it, and a cell-phone, because it's easy to lose track of the people you came with, she added.

Sounds like a lot of effort, but for Wilson, it's worth it, she said.

"Downtown and on (Parliament Hill) to people-watch and watch fireworks at night is definitely the place to be on Canada Day," she said. "I never miss it."

Hundreds of thousands of people gathered on Parliament Hill — and through a period of rain — to celebrate Canada's 142nd birthday yesterday.

Events included the flag-raising ceremony, the Changing of the Guard, the RCMP Musical Ride, and of course, the entertainment and the evening fireworks.

Performers included Sarah McLachlan, Marie Mai, The Respectables with Gordie Johnson, Shane Yellowbird, Marie-Jo Therio, K'naan, Chic Gamine and the Canadian Tenors.

There were also events at Major's Hill Park and across the Ottawa River at Jacques Cartier Park, free Ottawa International Jazz Festival shows at Confederation Park, and Aboriginal Experiences at Victoria Island.

Revellers also got to meet athletes at the Capital Infocentre, where there was a celebration of the Vancouver 2010 Olympic and Paralympic Winter Games.

Celebrating 100 years of flight

Thousands attend free activity day at Canada Aviation Museum

TIM WIECLAWSKI
tim.wieclawski@metronews.ca

Canada may be 142 years old, but it's only been flying for a century.

The Canada Aviation Museum celebrated Canada Day by throwing the doors open on one of the world's best aviation collections.

The free day of activity at the museum started with a citizenship ceremony for 100 people presided over by Gov. Gen. Michaëlle Jean, to mark Canada's centennial of powered flight.

Aircraft from the Ontario Provincial Police, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the Canadian Warplane Heritage Museum and Vintage Wings of Canada were flown in for the day for static displays outside the museum.

Canada Aviation Museum spokeswoman Marie-Josée Cadieux said they were expecting upwards of 6,000 visitors to the museum.

"This is our biggest day of the year," she said. "We have a lot of family activities going on."

The main aerial attraction was an appearance by the Snowbirds Demonstration Team.

Ottawa resident Paul Dey and his family came out to the aviation museum so his kids could see the planes and visit their granddad, who is volunteering with the restoration work on a 1948 Northstar aircraft.

"It's impressive to see the airplanes, and see Canada's aviation heritage," he said.

This is the second year that Paula McClintock spent Canada Day at the aviation museum.

"It's not quite as busy as downtown," said McClintock. "I wouldn't feel comfortable bringing my kids downtown so this is the perfect venue. They get to run around and they learn something too."

Four Canadian Tenors 'proud' to sing on Hill

Growing up in Ottawa, Remigio Pereira remembers coming downtown to Parliament Hill to join in the Canada Day festivities.

Yesterday, the Ottawa native returned to the Hill — but as a performer — when the Canadian Tenors took the Canada Day stage.

"I love coming back here," Pereira told Metro Ottawa yesterday. "It's a great feeling to be back in Ottawa."

The Canadian Tenors — comprised of Pereira, Port McNeil's Clifton Murray, Toronto's Victor Micallef and Vancouver's Fraser Walters — have performed their eclectic blend of classical and contemporary pop all over the world, from the Tel Aviv opera house where they shared the stage with Andrea Bocelli, to Las Vegas, where they played with David Foster and Friends.

But there's no place like home.

"We're Canadian, and the opportunity to sing for the Governor General and all the people on the Hill is so inspiring," said Murray. "You recharge your Canadian patriotic batteries and feel proud when you sing in front of a sea of red and white flags."

Cultural Capitals showcase their arts, communities

Ottawa's Canada Day celebration might be the biggest in the country, but that didn't mean there wasn't room to showcase five other cities and towns.

In partnership with the Department of Canadian Heritage's Cultural Capitals of Canada program, the National Capital Commission hosted artists from Coquitlam and Whistler, B.C., Trois-Rivières, Que., and Fredericton and Caraquet, N.B., as part of the Canada Day celebrations here.

Artists showed off pottery, spoon playing, storytelling, metalsmithing, weathervane making, broom making and even giant carnival heads that told the stories of their towns and cities at Major's Hill Park yesterday.

While a lot of people have heard of Caraquet, resident and artist Marie-Josée Brideau said the display teaches people about the area.

Whistler painter Vanessa Stark was hoping to convey her municipality as "a beautiful place to live."

Fredericton resident Denise Richard said "the arts community is very strong and there's a lot of theatre."

"It's a very dynamic little community," she said, pointing out its similarity to Ottawa.

Bill puts lives second: MP

Limit on damages in nuclear accidents not enough, says NDP

The Conservative government is putting the nuclear industry ahead of the lives of Canadians with a proposed law limiting damages in the event of an accident, a New Democrat MP says.

The government wants to update the Nuclear Liability Act to increase the maximum to $650 million in damages from the current $75 million set in the 1970s, but the NDP's Nathan Cullen said it should be in the billions of dollars.

"The crux of it is how much you can sue for in the event of a nuclear accident," said the MP for Skeena-Bulkley Valley.

Cullen said it's difficult to have confidence in an industry that has to be afforded this kind of protection in the first place, but completely another matter to lowball the cost of human life.

"Get somewhere in the ballpark ... into the billions for sure," he said in an interview.

On March 24, 2009, the federal government re-introduced Bill C-20 into Parliament, which proposes to replace the Nuclear Liability Act with a specific civil liability regime for nuclear incidents.

The bill is before the Commons natural resources committee when Parliament resumes sitting in September and the New Democrats are hoping to delay the bill — rag the puck, as it did last go around — so that it falls off the table

"The crux of it is how much you can sue for in the event of a nuclear accident ... Get somewhere in the ballpark ... into the billions for sure."

NDP MP Nathan Cullen

if and when there is another election.

"The timing is brutal ... with the problems we are seeing at Chalk River," Cullen said, referring to the leak of radioactive water that plagued the 52-year reactor in eastern Ontario earlier this year.

In May, Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. (AECL) announced it had found the source of the leak of radioactive water at the nuclear reactor that produces nearly half of the world's medical isotopes.

Cullen said the liability limit is about $10 billion in the U.S., which is a pool of funds paid into by the nuclear operators. In most other countries there is no ceiling on damages. "It is a pretty unusual situation as far as we can tell that Canada would have this very low ceiling," he said.

Cullen and other critics suspect the real reason behind the $650 million figures is to make Canada a more attractive place for companies wanting to build nuclear power plants, "which is a weird way to attract investment dollars."

The Conservative government has announced it wants to sell off the nuclear division of AECL Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd., and Cullen said the reduced liability exposure makes Canada a more favourable place for companies wanting to build nuclear power plants.

Bill C-20 proposes that operators of nuclear installations be exclusively liable for any nuclear incident, including personal injury and property damage.

The amended act states the liability of an operator for damage resulting from a nuclear incident is limited to $650 million and in most cases the operator cannot be liable for more.

However, an operator has to take $650-million insurance and if cannot find a private insurer, Ottawa will provide reinsurance through a special account called the Nuclear Liability Reinsurance Account.

Canada among worst of laggard G8: Report

CLIMATE CHANGE With only five months to go until a new global pact on climate change, none of the Group of Eight nations is doing enough to curb global warming, with Canada and the United States ranking bottom, a study said on yesterday.

Barack who?

Obama's visit next week leaves Russians cold

Adoring fans have flocked to see him on visits around the world, but Barack Obama should expect a far cooler reception in Russia next week.

"Obamamania" swept much of the world in January after Obama moved into the White House. But it largely passed Russians by. "We didn't even know he was coming," said a young woman employee at an upmarket Moscow clothing boutique.

Disputes over U.S. plans to position elements of a missile shield system in eastern Europe and a war last year between Russia and NATO-aspirant Georgia have strained Moscow-Washington ties.

"We didn't even know he was coming."

Russian newspapers did not plaster their front pages with photos of Obama's January inauguration like other publications around the world. And advance coverage of his July 6-8 trip in state-controlled media has been muted.

Most ordinary Russians have more pressing issues to consider — the financial crisis and unemployment — than Obama's first visit to their country as U.S. president.

"It's good that he's the president after Bush but we're far more worried about money than his trip," said Yevgeny Mesnikov, 26, before taking another slug from his bottle of beer.

He had just finished a 12-hour overnight shift renovating the nearby Bolshoi Theatre, work that he said paid $500 a month.

TENSIONS Police in Egypt have arrested 37 Muslims and Christians after a violent flareup.

The police acted over the killing of a Muslim man and violence that followed in a village in Egypt's Nile Delta, witnesses and security sources said yesterday.

The 18-year-old Muslim died Tuesday after a fight a day earlier, leading to the arrest of a Christian father, mother and two sons, as well as three Muslim men. The dispute arose over the price of goods at a shop owned by the Christian family. After the funeral of the dead man, dozens of Muslims set ablaze two Christian-owned homes and pelted stones at Christians. That violence led to the arrest of 30 more Muslims.

Relations between Egypt's majority Muslims and its Christians can erupt into violence over issues such as inter-faith relationships and land.

UN to launch probe into Bhutto killing

MURDER A UN fact-finding commission yesterday began an inquiry into the assassination of former Pakistani prime minister Benazir Bhutto.

Bhutto was murdered in a suicide gun-and-bomb attack in Rawalpindi on Dec. 27, 2007. It happened after a rally to drum up support for a general election she had hoped to win.

About 20 people were killed when the bomber struck as Bhutto was leaving a stadium waving to supporters from the roof escape hatch of her armoured vehicle.

Her murder threw nuclear-armed Pakistan into crisis. Her Pakistan People's Party rode a wave of sympathy to win a February 2008 election. Her widower, Asif Ali Zardari, became president.

The UN team is headed by Chile's UN Ambassador Heraldo Munoz.

Your cheating heart

ModernLife

Georgie Binks

Last week, South Carolina Gov. Mark Sanford admitted to an affair, the second American politician to go down, so to speak, in the past few weeks. Nevada Senator John Ensign (the first) must be relieved the public's guns are turned elsewhere momentarily.

The media asks whether either of these guys will continue in office. Me, I'm wondering why they gambled so big? Did either watch former New York governor Eliot Spitzer tap dance in front of the cameras last year as his wife endured her worst moment ever?

Noel Biderman, president and CEO of Ashley Madison, the infidelity dating site, says the more you have to gamble, the more you're going to gamble. "A lot of people in politics have already taken massive risks and they've paid off. They think they can continue to do it," Biderman figures the Teflon effect (nothing sticks) gives them that feeling of invincibility.

Of course, most married people shuffling through daily life have infinitely more trouble sussing out an affair with someone better looking than the spouse turning them down at home. Not like politicians, rock stars and sports figures, who seem to spend most of their waking hours avoiding them. After all, do you have groupies?

Modern technology has been a boon to low-budget, would-be cheaters. All you need is a computer to locate the object of your new affection and a cellphone to hide it from your soon-to-be ex.

The little people are just as susceptible to temptation as are the big cheeses.

Biderman quotes a university study showing more than 90 per cent of men and 50 per cent of women would have an affair with a person of their dreams (Sting?) if they wouldn't get caught or feel guilty, which brings me to my real question. What's keeping that measly 10 per cent of men faithful?

I thought pictures might tell me what the stories didn't. I was curious to find out what Sanford's girlfriend looked like (beautiful), wife (pretty), children (adorable). In fact, after seeing Sanford's kids in one family photo, I was puzzled by his compulsion to gamble with the family jewels.

With all the odds stacked in favour of Mark Sanford being a cheating man, the opportunity, the excitement and the fact that a heck of a lot of married people cheat these days, maybe he should have kept a little family photo in his chest pocket, just a little bit nearer to his heart.

A checkered history of Canadian feminism

FourthWave

Canice Leung

metronews.ca/fourthwave

There's plenty to celebrate on Canada Day — we're a nation of many cultures, many opinions; a vanguard for human rights — so what better time to celebrate (or rethink) what Canadians fought for in the name of feminism.

Nellie McClung, one of Canada's earliest feminists, successfully campaigned for the vote in Manitoba. Clever, articulate and quotable (she famously said, "Never retreat, never explain, never apologize — get the thing done and let them howl!"), she saw a link between human rights and women's rights, but that belief wasn't absolute: McClung supported eugenics and believed "young, simple-minded girls" should be sterilized under a 1928 bill in Alberta.

Her peers shared her views, including fellow Famous Five Emily Murphy. Murphy, under the pen name Janey Canuck, also argued for immigration control — "black and yellow races may yet obtain the ascendancy," she wrote in Maclean's, threatening to "wrest the leadership of the world from the British."

Alongside the black spots in our history are silly ones. Singer Rita MacNeil, now more matronly than incendiary, wrote women's lib songs in the 1970s. The male-dominated RCMP deemed MacNeil and her feminist ilk dangerous enough to spy on. While the force fretted about The Red Peril, massive social change was happening under its nose.

Celebrate the history-makers. Henry Morgentaler began performing illegal abortions in 1968, when the procedure was legal only to mothers facing health risks, and Stephen Lewis works tirelessly to improve the HIV/AIDS crisis in Africa. A new breed is making its mark, too: Lesbian and Muslim Irshad Manji writes about how to reform Islam, and Herizons and Shameless magazines shine in feminist media.

Still, there are great tragedies. It's estimated 520 native women have gone missing or been murdered since 1970. Last fall, the UN appealed to the federal government to investigate why the system failed to protect these women.

Systemically, the laws still reflect inequity. Recommendations from 1967's Royal Commission on the Status of Women are still unaddressed today: Daycare, wage equality, effective family law. And new issues pose great challenges: Discrimination based on sexual orientation or race, and violence against women.

There's much to celebrate, but we must learn from our checkered history, from racist policies to missing women — because, to borrow a phrase from Nellie McClung, "No nation rises higher than its women."

Canice Leung is a former editor of Ryerson University feminist magazine McClung's, copy editor at Metro, ardent feminist and loudmouth.

Greeks must get used to new smoking ban

Greeks were banned from smoking at work and inside bars and restaurants yesterday, but many question how the measure will work in Europe's heaviest smoking nation.

Terraces in central Athens filled up with smoking clients as tobacco is still allowed outside, and there was confusion over how the law will be applied indoors.

But Health Minister Dimitris Avramopoulos said the ban will work, contrary to past failed attempts.

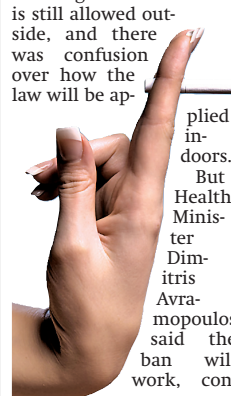

"Today Greece turns the page," he told Greek media. "It's the first time that this measure will be implemented, to end the myth that we make laws that we don't respect."

Greece breaks all European records with more than 40 per cent of the population smoking and six out of 10 being exposed to smoking at work, according to a European Union poll.

Many doubt the ban can be implemented in a country where smoking is such an entrenched tradition.

Smoking-related diseases kill about 20,000 people a year in Greece, costing the country $3.01 billion US a year, the health ministry said.

Housing inches toward recovery

The worst of Canada's housing market woes appear to be past but the sector's rebound will be tenuous as a rise in mortgage rates and high unemployment limit the recovery in prices and sales.

Experts say first-time buyers and Bank of Canada rate cuts have helped restore stability to a market that slumped from late 2008 to early this year, when the worst leg of the financial crisis battered consumer confidence.

"We should be less fearful than we were six months ago, but I don't think we should be exuberant yet. The resale markets in Canada are very strong. May numbers were pretty good, and June numbers will be even better," said Will Dun-

Data suggests Canada's residential property market, which weathered the financial crisis much better than its U.S. counterpart, has been thawing for several months. REUTERS

GM must sell main assets to 'New GM': U.S. official

AUTO The only viable option to save General Motors Corp. is a sale of its main assets to a "New GM" backed by the U.S. government, a U.S. Treasury official told a court yesterday as the automaker sought approval for the deal.

The official, Harry Wilson, also said the government would withdraw its portion of the $33-billion financing for GM if the sale of the main assets did not close by the government's July 10 deadline.

GM was in the second day of a bankruptcy court hearing in Manhattan in which it is asking Judge Robert Gerber to approve its asset sales.

If the deal is approved, the "New GM" would be a company that would have the best parts of the old company, a less expensive workforce and much less debt. REUTERS

Federer advances to Wimbledon semifinals

TENNIS British hope Andy Murray and five-times champion Roger Federer charged headlong towards a Wimbledon final showdown yesterday while two of the game's wildest campaigners were conspiring to gatecrash the party.

The top seeds recorded emphatic victories on another sun-baked day on Centre Court, as Tommy Haas stunned fourth seed Novak Djokovic and Andy Roddick was the last man standing in a gripping four-hour gunfight with old foe Lleyton Hewitt.

Less than 48 hours after putting his mother, girlfriend, 15,000 Centre Court fans and millions of British television viewers through the wringer with his electrifying five-set win against Stanislas Wawrinka, Murray produced a no-nonsense 7-5, 6-3, 6-2 win over Juan Carlos Ferrero.

While the authoritative exhibition gave Murray a place in the last four at Wimbledon for the first time, the sight of all-conquering Federer at the tail-end of a grand slam is taken for granted these days.

The world No. 2 reached his 21st successive major semi by dousing the fire-works of Croatian ace machine Ivo Karlovic 6-3, 7-5, 7-6.

"Twenty-one in row, it's amazing. Means the world to me. It's been quite a streak and I'm happy it's still alive," said Federer, in hot pursuit of a record 15th major.

Hossa believes in Hawks

After failing in Pittsburgh and Detroit, star winger signs with Chicago

The Chicago Blackhawks went on a free agent shopping spree yesterday, signing high-scoring winger Marian Hossa to a staggering 12-year deal that signalled they are ready to challenge for a Stanley Cup.

Just hours after the free agent signing window had opened, the Blackhawks had their wallets out, luring Hossa away from the Detroit Red Wings with a contract worth $62.8 million according to local media reports.

Hossa was joined in the Windy City by fellow Slovak and Red Wing teammate Tomas Kopecky, who signed a two-year deal.

"To add Marian, an elite and world-class player, and Tomas, a Stanley Cup champion, to our exciting young core reinforces our commitment to try to win the Stanley Cup," Blackhawks general manager Dale Tallon said in a statement.

Taken with the 12th overall pick by the Ottawa Senators in the 1997 draft, Hossa has 339 goals and 719 points in a career that has also included a stop in Atlanta.

The Blackhawks were not the only team eager to do business.

Just before the NHL free agent signing window opened, the Vancouver Canucks inked Swedish twins Daniel and Henrik Sedin to identical five-year deals worth $30.5 million according to local media reports.

The Anaheim Ducks strengthened their blueline, signing captain Scott Niedermayer to a one-year contract while the Toronto Maple Leafs added some toughness inking enforcer Colton Orr to a four-year $4 million deal.

Toronto GM Brian Burke said the Maple Leafs would be meaner and tougher next season and was good on his word signing Orr.

New York immediately went out and signed Washington Capitals' Donald Brashear.

Sports in brief

COYOTES The National Hockey League is backing a bid by sports team mogul Jerry Reinsdorf to buy the bankrupt Phoenix Coyotes for up to $148 million rather than the $212.5-million offer from Jim Balsillie. The NHL believes the owner of MLB's Chicago White Sox and the NBA's Chicago Bulls teams will keep the team in the Phoenix area.

SOCCER Brazil has ended Spain's one-year reign at the top of FIFA's rankings, rewarded for its comeback win over the United States in the Confederations Cup final.

Canada, however, dropped nine spots to No. 92, sandwiched between Sudan and Iceland.

MLB Baseball is expanding all-star rosters yet again. Each league will have 33 players for the July 14 game at St. Louis, with an extra pitcher added to bring the total to 13. The commissioner's office said the extra spot will be a manager's choice. Rosters were expanded from 30 to 32 after 2002's 7-7, 11-inning tie in Milwaukee, when both leagues ran out of pitchers.

Tips to avoid undie lounging

HomeScape

Sylvia Putz

metronews.ca/homescape

Are you lounging around in your underwear to keep cool instead of turning on the air conditioning full-blast?

Well, you can pat yourself on the back because you're doing the right thing, from an environmental point of view anyway. (I'm not sure about the unsuspecting people who may knock at your door, but it's worth it when you're saving the planet, right?)

Well, even if you're not into walking around in your undies, there are fortunately lots of other ways you can keep yourself and your house naturally cool with minimal need for the AC.

When it gets hot outside, keeping cool requires two things. One is that you keep the external heat outside, and two is that you refrain from creating internal heat as much as possible.

If it's going to be a scorcher, keep the sun from shining into your house and heating it up. Keep your windows and curtains closed on the sunny side of the house, and consider keeping all windows shut if the outside air is hotter than the inside air. White window shades or drape liners and blinds reflect heat the best. Once the sun has sunk below the horizon in the evening, you may open windows to allow in cooler air, especially if there's a lovely breeze.

With its minimal energy needs, a ceiling fan is perfect for keeping cool this summer.

On hot days, a ceiling fan (which has minimal energy needs) should be set so that it blows air down. It doesn't actually make the air cooler, of course, but moving air can make you feel much cooler and more comfortable. A portable fan works inside, if used properly. They can be used to create an air flow. For example, you can pull in cool evening air and open an opposite window to push out the heated air that may have accumulated in your home.

An attic fan that blows heated attic air outside is also a great idea because it can create an air flow through the house, pulling up cooler basement air. Investing in increased attic insulation (up to 12 inches) can also make a difference.

Inside the house, keep it cool by managing your time so heat-producing activities occur at night. For example, don't wash clothes until later in the evening and consider drying them on a clothes rack or line outside, if possible. Use cold water wash whenever possible. Wash dishes in the evening, and turn off the heat drying cycle on the dishwasher. If you have a fan installed, use it to suck away hot damp air in places where it is generated, like showers, or laundry rooms.

Cooking, particularly in the oven, will heat up your home fast. Use a microwave, or barbecue outside, use a slow-cooker plugged into an outlet in the garage, or eat a salad meal. If you use your stove or burners, turn on the fan so the heat is whisked outside. Put electronic devices like TVs and computers on a power switch and turn them off when they're not in use so they're not producing heat all day. And as my dad used to say, turn the lights off if they are not needed. Use fluorescent light whenever possible, since incandescents produce heat, besides being inefficient energy users.

Of course, there is nothing better than long-term good planning, and if you can stick around for the long-term, do invest in planting big shady deciduous trees on southern and western exposures.

Minimize hard concrete or stone surfaces around your house in favour of plantings, since stone and concrete retains heat and reflects it back at you in the evening.

Springing into the garden can be a stretch

WELLNESS After a long winter we're often eager to switch our bags of salt for bags of soil. We just can't wait to get out into the garden and begin digging, raking, lifting, and planting. However, without the right preparation you could end up with stiff, sore joints and muscles, back pain or injuries.

Warm-up with a short walk, then gently repeat each of the following stretches five times.

Thigh Stretch: With one hand on the wall or a tree, bend your left knee then reach back and hold your ankle with your right hand. Pull your heel toward your buttocks and hold.

Back Stretch: Sit on a chair and slowly bend your body forward from your hips, putting your head down and resting your hands on the floor.

Shoulder Rolls: With your arms hanging loosely at your sides, slowly rotate your shoulders in a circular motion forward, then backward.

Wrist Flexion: Hold one arm straight out as if you were giving a "stop" signal, use your opposite hand to hold this position.

Off the cuff

The suit got an update for spring during the Paris men's spring 2010 runway shows with cuffed trousers popping up at Hermes, Lanvin and Comme des Garçons among others. The silhouettes were relaxed, and sometimes slouchy, with the cuffs reaching as high as the calf. Maybe that means spring will be all about the socks too?

The fashion timeline

A look at Michael Jackson's sartorial milestones:

- Late 1970s — Jackson establishes his white sock/black shoe combo.
- 1979 — Jackson reveals a new 'do and a penchant for bow ties and sequins.
- 1983 — The singer's red leather, zippered jacket becomes the it item of the '80s, sparking knock-offs the world over.
- 1983 — Jackson switches it up to the military jacket at a press conference for The Jacksons' Victory tour.
- 1996 — The face mask and extravagant-looking space age boots become a part of MJ's look.
- 2007 — In the years following his controversial child molestation case, Jackson tones it down in pared down monochromatic jackets and trousers.
- 2009 — The embellished jacket returns for the press conference publicizing his comeback tour. Jackson also makes headlines for inspiring the highly coveted jackets in the fall and spring '09 Balmain collections.

Michael Jackson's wardrobe revealed a side of himself overshadowed by the plastic surgery

KENYA HUNT
Metro World News

It's interesting to see how Michael Jackson's death has resonated around the world.

From Boston, to Stockholm to Lisbon, newspapers have featured four, six and eight page spreads devoted to his life and legacy. Most of them focus on his ever-changing face, with think pieces examining how his plastic surgery reflected inner conflict about his race and sexuality. But his constantly evolving wardrobe is perhaps just as indicative of who the notoriously enigmatic singer was.

In a recent interview with the AOL blog Stylelist, Phillip Bloch, who dressed Jackson for an Ebony magazine cover shoot (which turned out to be his last photo shoot ever) noted that Jackson was not very knowledgeable of the high fashion world. He asked Bloch if the famous British designer Paul Smith was American, and if the legendary Japanese designer Yohji Yamamoto was Italian.

The fact that Jackson wasn't looped into the high fashion world says even more about his trend setting as an artist. Whereas his face may have reflected an uncertainty about his racial and sexual identity, his distinct sartorial trademarks (the white glove, glittery socks, bow tie and red leather jacket for instance), which began to emerge very early on in his career, displayed a certainty of self as a performer.

And rather than constantly re-invent his wardrobe, the way he did with his face, he instead stuck with a formula and perfected it, adding on bombastic pieces that mirrored his growing superstardom. There was the colour palette: red, black, white, gold and silver. And then the building blocks: the loafers, cowboy boots, regal military jackets, boxing championship style belts, space-age metallic tops, moon boots and showy suits.

It was over the top in many ways, yes. It was also very telling, revealing a self-loving side of himself that the plastic surgery eventually overshadowed.

Off stage, he may have been an emotionally disturbed and conflicted man (I still cringe at the footage of baby Blanket dangling over that balcony). But on stage, he was the king of pop.

Right: Michael Jackson circa 2001. The singer's constantly evolving wardrobe displayed a certainty of self.

Jackson will file, ex-wife omitted

PEOPLE Details of Michael Jackson's will began to emerge yesterday with all of his multimillion-dollar estate being placed in a family trust, even as plans for his highly anticipated funeral remained sketchy.

The will, signed in 2002, estimates his estate at that time to be worth in excess of $500 million US and was filed with a Los Angeles Court. In it, Jackson leaves his entire estate to the Michael Jackson Family Trust, which ultimately benefits his three children, mother and unnamed charities.

Jackson's 79-year-old mother, Katherine Jackson, is nominated to be guardian of Jackson's children Prince Michael I, 12, Paris Michael Katherine, 11 and Prince Michael II, 7, and if she should be unwilling and unable to be guardian, Jackson nominated his friend, pop star Diana Ross, to be the children's guardian.

The five-page document said "I have intentionally omitted to provide for my former wife, Deborah Rowe Jackson."

Jackson's will has been the subject of much speculation since the pop star died last Thursday, age 50, after suffering cardiac arrest. The pop star left behind an estate that includes part ownership in a Beatles music catalog and his own music company that held rights to some of his music. REUTERS

YET, let's just call this Wilco Can Take It Easy Now. In fact, album number seven offers all the best moments of this Chicago alt-rock outfit's career: A bit of country flavouring here, some tension-laden experimental rock there. Add to that some fresh inspiration via a lovely duet with Canuck songstress Feist, the dry-witted self-referential title song and subtle melodic nods to the Traveling Wilburys and Big Star. Album: Wait for Me

Label: Warner/Asylum

Rating: ♂♂♂♂

IT'S BEEN A decade since Moby released club hit Play, but this might be his most intriguing album. There's nary a party beat here — it's all haunting, introspective atmospherics that would be better suited to a frightening film than a club. Wait for Me isn't for everyone, but when it comes down to it, Moby is challenging himself again.

Handyman Superstar Challenge

They may not qualify for "Canada's Worst Handyman," but the do-it-yourselfers competing on this show — which starts its fourth season tonight — are far from perfect. Ten contestants, all accomplished do-it-yourselfers, undergo an assortment of challenges to determine which of them — if any — is deserving of the title "superstar." Karen Bertelsen hosts, and Mike Holmes ("Holmes on Homes") and Jim Caruk ("Real Renos") are the judges. 2 PM on 49 H&G

Stephen Rea ("The Crying Game") and Gordon Pinsent also appear in the 2004 mystery. 9 PM on 61 V

Madonna's still got it

PROVOCATEUR A promo by Madonna for an upcoming show in St. Petersburg, Russia, is causing outrage because the star swears in the first few seconds of the taped message.

The singer starts the promo for her Aug. 2 show by saying it will be "F—in amazing" in Russia.

The promo has rattled even her local management. "We are not just amazed, it's not the right word — we are in shock," said Marianna Lubina, press representative of the PMI company, which is bringing Madonna to St. Petersburg. "Her greeting is extremely short, and will be much shorter when we cut this filthy word."

Duff as McCain's daughter?

ROLE OF A LIFETIME Megan McCain, daughter of U.S. Senator John McCain, is already casting the movie version of her forthcoming memoir, even though she hasn't finished writing it yet.

"I want Hilary Duff to play me. I think she's really hot — hotter than me — but I'd still want her to play me," McCain told Gatecrasher, though she admits she isn't picky. "Really, I'd take anyone who's blonde."

McCain says she's writing the book as part political, part memoir. "It's like Primary Colors meets Tori Spelling's sTori Telling," she explained. "I want young women to actually be able to read it."

Saying goodbye to an angel

FINAL FAREWELL Ryan and Redmond O'Neal tearfully joined Farrah Fawcett's closest friends and family for the actress' private funeral Tuesday afternoon at the Cathedral of Our Lady of the Angels in downtown Los Angeles, people.com reports.

Fawcett's Charlie's Angels co-star Kate Jackson, along with Marla Maples, Joan Collins and Tatum

O'Neal were among the 200 guests attending the hour-long Catholic service, where long-time pal Alana Stewart and Fawcett's doctor Lawrence Piro delivered eulogies.

"Goodbye sweet girl," said Stewart. "(Farrah) never felt sorry for herself during her illness... she fought cancer furiously."

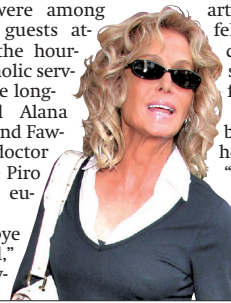

"She's the most beautiful angel in heaven," she added. "She always seemed so indestructible."

O'Neal and son Redmond served as pallbearers carrying Fawcett's casket, adorned with yellow and orange flowers.

"The funeral was really just beautiful and so sweet," Lisa Fawcett, the actress' cousin, told People. A special moment during the service came when "everyone just embraced (Redmond)," she said about Fawcett's 24-year-old son, who was allowed to leave jail and attend.
